

Meet David

Here is a little boy who is just waiting for a family to love him forever, and to help him to unlock his real potential. David's autism has made it difficult for him to relate to others readily, but, with patience and commitment, he reveals the loving, affectionate person within. He has been able to bond well with his foster family, and the other children in the home, as well as with others who have been a part of his life for a significant period of time. Nonverbal, David is learning sign language, and is involved in programs to help him to "bridge the gap" and to move more comfortably through the world. A family considering adopting David would need an understanding of openness to learn about autism and a commitment to the continuation of therapeutic services appropriate to his needs.
